FON LEGBA PHALLUS

$480

c. 1800 • Benin • Wood, Steel • Collection #CAA0914B

W: 4.25" D: 4.0" H: 17.0"

Intended to ensure fertility and bountiful harvests, this carved-wood phallus is called a legba and was among many buried outside dwellings and in the fields of the Fon people of West Africa. These carvings are named after Legba, the trickster son of God, who serves as an interlocutor between the human and the divine. Stories abound about Legba's devious behaviors. In one tale, Legba, frustrated at being blamed for all adversity while God is praised for good fortune, imprinted God's footprints on a wet field so that he would be blamed for the theft of the Fon people's yam harvest. ## FON LEGBA PHALLUS

Angry for falling victim to Legba's ruse, God departed to the heavens, leaving his son to facilitate communication between the earthly realm and the spiritual world. We've mounted this legba on simple base to accentuate its sculptural qualities and conversation-sparking form.
