This refined elmwood cupboard was created in China's Jiangsu region in the mid-18th century, shortly after the region was established as an imperial province. Perhaps furnishing the home of a newly relocated official, the cabinet exemplifies the restraint of Ming-dynasty design. Simple lattice doors offer a discreet view of the contents stored within while adding a sense of lightness to the cabinet's minimalist silhouette. Its timeless design suits the modern household, serving as a media cabinet, linen cupboard, or bookcase.
