H: 23.0" Dia: 26.0"

Simply shaped with an elegant form, this large limestone vessel is actually a runner stone, a key component to a traditional Chinese grain mill. Set atop an extensively carved mill stone, the runner stone was harnessed to a donkey or mule that pulled the runner in a circular motion across the bottom mill stone. With repeated rotations, the heavy weight of the stone was used to grind a variety of grains into flour. This early 20th century runner stone was likely originally covered in a pattern of grooves, but frequent use has worn down the surface to the smooth texture it has today. Continued...

RUNNER STONE VESSEL SCULPTURE

Despite its functional origins, the stone lives on as a piece of sculpture, a piece of history tucked away in the garden.
